

Target Scale Question

What characterises the near, medium and far field tracked targets?

Near field means that the object is close enough that you can see details of body parts and pose. Far field means that the object is so far that you cannot make out any details - it's just a moving blob. Medium field is in between, where you can make out some colour and rough shape, but not details of body configuration, pose or identity.