

Pose Estimation Question

Why did we use least square algorithms for estimating the rotation and translation, instead of using a single line (which would give the rotation) and a single point (which would give the translation)?

A single data feature could be segmented or its position estimated badly. A least square estimate spreads the error among all matched features.