

Introduction Review Problem

Why does occlusion cause problems for object recognition?

ANSWER:

Because normally objects are represented by encoding all of the parts. When objects are occluded, then some of these parts are not visible. This means that there are discrepancies between what is expected and what is observed.