Algorithmics Problem

Why do we split the data into training, validation and test sets?

ANSWER:
It prevents overtraining. We can set parameters with the training data, and then use the validation set to tell when to stop training. Or to select between different configurations. Finally, the test set is useful for estimating the real performance, because this data was not used in the training process.