

Probabilistic Classifier Problem

Should we use $p(\vec{x} | C)$ or $p(C | \vec{x})$ to decide which class an object belongs to? Why?

ANSWER:

We should use $p(C | \vec{x})$ because we are interested in the probability of the class C rather than the probability of observing the data \vec{x} .