Background Subtraction Question

When dividing by the background image to compensate for widely varying illumination, we are assuming more than just the background being constant. What else must be constant?

ANSWER:
The illumination may vary across the scene, but it has to be the same at all times (otherwise you're dividing by illumination different than seen in the test image).